Mr. Glass surprised his audience by declaring that Senator Daniel before his death, distrusted the motives of Mr. Swanson, and when he read a Daniel, he added:

There's a difference between a statesman and gentleman, and a pea-man elected to the Legislature from Botetourt. "who broke his pledge to his people to vote for Lee and voted instead for Martin."

Mr. Jones also wondered what the "obscure" legislators would think of Senator Martin's reference to them. In this letter, he said, there were no references to the "saving of the State or the maintenance of Anglo-Saxon civilization."

"Thompson would naver have written such a letter," he said, "because he is not a fool and doesn't write foolish letters like that."

What will the 200 men fro malbemario think of the man they came all the way to Richmond to see," asked Mr. Jones, who scored them for going to Richmond wearing hadges, one of which the speaker exhibited. It carried the inscription, "I am for the machine." DECLARES ATTACK

I feel that it is really unnecessary to have said this much to you, but have not been able to refrain from doing so, whether necessary or not, my interest is so deep in this matter. Should the extremists dominate the next legislature the result will have been accomplished at least after all warning I could give has been given.

Your friend, (Signed) THOMAS S. MARTIN.

J. S. B. THOMPSON.

Hotel Carroll, Lynchburg, Va., August 20, 1911.

Hon, William A. Jones, Lynchburg, Va.1

Dear Sir,-I hand you berewith some letters written by Mr. Thomas S. Martin between the years 1890 and 1896, which I think very conclusively give the tie to a large part of that gentleman's defense.

These letters came into my hands through certain accidental circumstances which are unnecessary to relate. I will say, however, that no trust relationship bus been violated.

Since I have known of them (which has been for a number of years) naturaily I have had little respect for their author and no patience whatever with his political methods. The keynote of the man and all his political methods may, as every one knows, be expressed by that one little word "stealth." And, too, as every one knows, under his system a man is judged by this single crite-rion-how loyal he is to and what will he do for the "gang" in power! This rion—how loyal he is to and what will he do for the "gang" in power? This is my chief grievance, for it war is and destroys individuality and results in a crime against the political man! od of the State.

I know that there are hundred of men scattered in all sections of the State who might, if they chose, do much towards breaking up this peraleious ring rule in Virginia by merely opening their mouths and telling what they know; but since they are all silent, and sluce no one else will speak a word for the good of the old State. The first part of the control of the since they are all silent, and since no one clae will speak a word for the good of the old State, I feel that it is my plain duty to do so by giving to the public this information that has fallen into my hands. With the exception of one person to whom I have spoken, and another to whom I have shown these letters, no one clae, as far as I know, has any knowledge of their existence. I am acting entirely upon my own initiative and responsibility. The criticism to which I may be subjected for handing you these letters will merely entertain me.

ried the inscription, "I am for the machine."

Mr Jones also lashed Mr. Flood for sending out a postal card with "Jones and Glass have about as much chance for the Senate as a celluloid dog has for catching an asbestor cat in h—l," written on it.

"Senator Martin says that he will carry the election by 25,060 votes," he continued. "How did he have time to find this us when he was working sixteen hours a day in the Senate? How did he find it out so soon? It looks as if the agents of the machine had been reporting to him. Maybe he will get his 25,000 by counting the names on the graves in Norfolk, by repetition of the ofitrageous fraud practiced in the Sixth District when it was necessary to elect Martin."

He complained that no judge would be allowed to represent himself or Mr. Glass in the elections, as they had requested.

Taking up the next letter, he said Taking up the next letter, he said that no proposed to be requested.

Taking up the next letter, he said that the matter there proposed to be done was meant to be done in such a way as to amount to a "bargain and deal."

Other Letters to Come Later.

His other seven letters will be given out later. In the meantime, Mr. Jones says he will await the answer of Senator Martin. "These letters will shock the moral sense of heneat men throughout Virginia," declared Mr. Jones. "I have done my duty in ex-
